WHY INDUSTRIES SHOULD COME TO DIXON FOR HOME

Essay Contest Being Conducted on Vital Theme Here

"Why New Industries Should Come to Dixon" is the theme for an essay contest which is being conducted by the New Industries Committee of the Dixon Chamber of Commerce. All Dixon high school students are eligible to enter the contest which closes on Friday September 25th.

A number of valuable prizes are being provided by various Dixon business men to be awarded as a recognition of merit for the best essays which are submitted by Dixon high school students. The contest is being staged by the new industries committee of the Dixon Chamber of Commerce in co-operation with the same committee of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce.

Prizes for state wide competition are being offered by the latter organization. These prizes are $100, $50 and $25, respectively, for the best, second best and third best essay of those sent in to them as being the best from the high school in Dixon of the different cities in all over the state.

Not Haphazard Matter.

Location of any industry is determined by the advantages which cities or communities possess which are of value to that particular industry. In other words, there are specific reasons why any industry determines upon a certain location and the matter is not a haphazard one. In order to locate the location of industries, it is necessary for every city or community to take stock of the advantages which it possesses which would have such value. Taking this into account and in order to present to the fullest extent, consistent with the actual facts, the advantages which Dixon possesses as attractive and valuable to industries has brought about the appointment of the New Industries Committee of the Dixon Chamber of Commerce. This committee is composed of Robert Hallenberg, Chairman, Frank Cahill, E. N. Howell and O. H. Moore. As indicated, this committee's purpose is to take stock of this community's advantages and to investigate and interest manufacturers to locate in Dixon.

It is thought that an essay contest, such as the one set forth, will stimulate a general interest and particularly on the part of those who in a relatively few years will be taking their active parts in the community's activities, in those things which bring about prosperity and growth of the community. From the interest already manifested in the contest, it appears that Dixon high school students are going to universally respond with essays.

The robbery was committed two days before Christmas of 1923.

Is Wanted in Chicago.

Burns testified at the trial in the circuit court in Rock Island that the Cox brothers told him they were in difficulties and that they wanted to "frame" a robbery and collect the insurance.

Records of the trial show that Burns testified that B. F. Cox gave him $75 a few days before the robbery, that he furnished $300 on the night of the robbery and further that H. R. Cox promised to pay him $5,000 after the insurance was paid.

WOMEN OF MOOSEHEART LEGION
The Women of Mooseheart Legion will meet Tuesday evening at Moose hall.

BY CYNTHIA GREY
Here is a woman's point of view on our newest national disgrace. . . .

A commission has just been named in this country to determine the cause of the terrific increase in crime, and to find some solution to the problem. Of course, changing times have brought new crimes, or what appear to be new crimes to us.

As a matter of fact, they are as old as civilization itself. For what is running but smuggling. . . . and what is "high-jacking" but crime feeding on crime?

The increase in crime which has come with prohibition is due to weakness in enforcing the law. And this weakness of law-enforcement in turn is born of public sentiment.

But there are deeper causes of crime, and they are more apparent, I think, to women than they are to men. The solution, too, is in the hands of women.

Let me explain. More than half the offenders in any police court in the country are men and women who have no home surroundings, or whose home surroundings are improper.

And of these more than half are feeble-minded. . . . men and women incapable of knowing right from wrong. . . . criminal agents ready to the hand of sharp, professional law-violators.

Lombroso, the criminologist, used to say that he could tell a crook by looking at him. Everybody, he said, was born either honest or dishonest.

According to him, the contour of the face, the formation of the skull, the look in the eye, betrayed either the crook or the honest man.

But few believe this nowadays. We see a man with the face of a saint. . . . for instance Dicky Loeb who killed young Bobbie Franks in Chicago. . . . charged with the most heinous of crimes. And again we see a man with the face of a brigand devoting his life to good works.

A child born to the life of the streets has more than an even chance to become a criminal. If intelligent, he becomes a law-breaker of the most dangerous type. If a mental weakling he becomes merely the tool of the normal minded.

Few of our states have done any really effective work toward solving this problem of the feeble-minded. Such institutions for their care as exist are so over-crowded as to be all but useless. And so the number of moron criminals increases year by year.

As they increase we may expect crime to increase! And to legislate for some new way of protecting the world against them is the work of women.

Why? Because the improvement of the race is the natural problem of the mothers of the race. It is the sort of thing that women understand. . . . and the thing that should interest them vitally.

What's the solution for the other class of crooks. . . . those started on the downward path by improper home surroundings?

Well, for one thing, we can make marriage more difficult by a law of eugenics. . . . and thus reduce the number of divorces and broken homes and children in the streets. We can do more to keep together good homes threatened with destruction by poverty.

Mothers' pensions would help along with that, for one thing.

Cost too much, you say?

Not so much as we pay now for workhouses, prisons, insane asylums and orphan's homes!

Here is a woman's point of view on our newest national disgrace. . . .

A commission has just been named in this country to determine the cause of the terrific increase in crime, and to find some solution to the problem. Of course, changing times have brought new crimes, or what appear to be new crimes to us.

As a matter of fact, they are as old as civilization itself. For what is running but smuggling. . . . and what is "high-jacking" but crime feeding on crime?

The increase in crime which has come with prohibition is due to weakness in enforcing the law. And this weakness of law-enforcement in turn is born of public sentiment.

But there are deeper causes of crime, and they are more apparent, I think, to women than they are to men. The solution, too, is in the hands of women.

Let me explain. More than half the offenders in any police court in the country are men and women who have no home surroundings, or whose home surroundings are improper.

And of these more than half are feeble-minded. . . . men and women incapable of knowing right from wrong. . . . criminal agents ready to the hand of sharp, professional law-violators.

Lombroso, the criminologist, used to say that he could tell a crook by looking at him. Everybody, he said, was born either honest or dishonest.

According to him, the contour of the face, the formation of the skull, the look in the eye, betrayed either the crook or the honest man.

But few believe this nowadays. We see a man with the face of a saint. . . . for instance Dicky Loeb who killed young Bobbie Franks in Chicago. . . . charged with the most heinous of crimes. And again we see a man with the face of a brigand devoting his life to good works.

A child born to the life of the streets has more than an even chance to become a criminal. If intelligent, he becomes a law-breaker of the most dangerous type. If a mental weakling he becomes merely the tool of the normal minded.

Few of our states have done any really effective work toward solving this problem of the feeble-minded. Such institutions for their care as exist are so over-crowded as to be all but useless. And so the number of moron criminals increases year by year.

As they increase we may expect crime to increase! And to legislate for some new way of protecting the world against them is the work of women.

Why? Because the improvement of the race is the natural problem of the mothers of the race. It is the sort of thing that women understand. . . . and the thing that should interest them vitally.

"SHEER WASTE OF MONEY."

"Three-fourths of all the cases brought before the courts are sheer waste of money, because they are for the benefit of lawyers and not for the benefit of the public," Judge Anderson of the United States court is quoted as saying in a discussion pertaining to courts.

It may be assumed that Judge Anderson knows and that he bases his declaration upon better information than is available to most of us. In matters of general litigation, that is the misfortune of the litigants, some of whom are willful litigants and some of whom are in court involuntarily. We see cases going through the courts in which the costs mount far above the sums involved. This happens because participants are made. They may have been within $10 or $25 of a settlement before they went to trial. If the lawyers get their money, the people who pay it receive small sympathy.

Industrial commissions, by which damages are fixed without a jury and compensation is determined by a commissioner, have removed many actions from the courts. In the absence of statistical information it is difficult to state how much more the claimants obtain now than formerly. It still is necessary to engage lawyers, and there still is opportunity of review by a court. But it is not necessary to assemble the great mass of law and evidence heretofore required to determine the question of liability.

Industrial compensation acts were born of the situation by which damage suits brought against corporations left little for the claimant when he was through with the court. There was a time when this class of cases occupied the greater part of the time of the circuit court here. Now the only personal injury cases that come into this court result from automobile accidents or from a situation in which employer and employee are not involved.

It is quite probable that statistics would show a considerable economic saving by use of the compensation laws, although a separate machine is necessary to administer them. In courts the litigants do not pay all of the costs. Running expenses of the courts are maintained by the public.

There is a fee grabbing system, however, that has been given an airing, which may result in some correction. It may not. It pertains to bankruptcies and receiverships. In these affairs people are in courts involuntarily. The debtors gladly would escape, and the creditors are there because they can not help themselves. The court simply takes charge, almost automatically, to adjudicate affairs.

It has appeared from recent revelations that bankruptcies provide a wonderful trough from which the hungry feed. Not all of the feeders are lawyers, although the majority of them are. Receivers draw heavily on the assets, and when the division is made of the remainder, for which anxious creditors wait a long time, it is found that most of these assets have been eaten by "necessary expenses" of the bankruptcy or receivership.

Receiverships go as political favors often, and men live for years on the salvage of an unfortunate investment. Of course it is not a crime to make these "good things" last as long as they will, and the fact that courts are slow makes a good excuse.—Moline Dispatch.

FARMERS' NEW PROSPERITY.

"There is a tendency to exaggerate the improvement in the situation of our farmers, says S. H. Thompson, president of the Illinois Agricultural association, "and on this account a warning should be sounded. Farmers are still faced with the marketing machinery in which the law of supply and demand works quickly against them, but mighty slowly in their favor."

Livestock appears to be the key to the marketing situation which will work to the advantage of the Illinois farmer, if he markets wisely, according to Mr. Thompson in an interview given in the Christian Science Monitor. The price of livestock is now at a level which will make feeding of the present crops at prevailing prices a profitable enterprise.

"If our corn crop," said Mr. Thompson, "can be marketed through livestock, a good income should be derived from the present yield by the Illinois farmer. But livestock must be marketed so as to prevent a break in present levels. If the price of meat declines, it will prove unprofitable to feed corn and we will have a surplus."

WASTE.

Standardization has been applied generally to production. But we hesitate to apply that economy to distribution. For instance: There are just three grades of certain canned fruits.

Every can of each of these grades is exactly like every other. No body's "brand" is any better or any worse than any other, except as some brands stand for first and some for second or third grades. There is no concealment which of these any particular brand is.

Yet the very packers themselves put out their goods under a dozen brands of their own, ostensibly competing with themselves, besides the scores of customers' private brands.

It is supposed to help "selling." It certainly does not make for saving lost motion in distribution generally. And somebody pays for it.

Florida has been there all of the time and we have just begun to find it out.

TOM SIMS SAYS

Any blame fool can see a wise man's mistakes.

Bad news from Texas. Grasshoppers there. What Texans need is more time for fishing.

They think a Virginia man who whipped his wife is crazy. If she can cook, we agree with them.

Here and there you see people wanting more happiness yet using only a small part of what they have.

Truth is great stuff. But if all of it were known practically everybody would be arrested.

That's the trouble with having too many laws. They have a tendency to arrest progress.

School's starting. Few children hate school. It's the studies they don't like.

About $20,000,000 alimony is paid yearly in this country. Better run home and kiss your wife.

Florida burglars blew a safe. Got only four stamps and a pencil. But now they can write home for money.

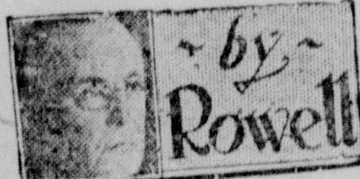

They claim a Chicago man robbed three houses a night. Maybe he is trying to keep a son in college.

No man is as bad as he is painted and few autos are as good.

People who want a living for nothing are getting to be almost as scarce as flivvers.

It's been several years since it was safe to cuss in a barber shop.

Cleveland man stole an auto. Stayed out riding all night. Judge gave him thirty days to catch up on his sleep.

Some of these bathing beauties would be almost naked if it were not for their ear stoppers.

You don't need a "gun," even when the burglar has one.

A thief broke into the dressing room of a dancing school in Oakland and stole a purse.

One of the girls saw him, and at sight of the "gun," was too scared to keep still. So she set up a yell and the burglar jumped through a window, dropping both purse and revolver.

If that girl had had a weapon and the courage and presence of mind to try to use it, she would probably have been dead and the burglar on trial for murder.

As it is, with no better protection than a shrill voice and hysterical nerves, the burglar was routed and the girl has still her purse, and the invader's abandoned pistol to boot. The criminal himself may or may not be caught by the police for this particular crime; but, unless he breaks the rule of his kind by reforming, he will in due time catch himself and break into jail.

Let the police catch the criminals. Your job is to protect yourself. And the best way to do that is not to have a "gun" around.

American automobile tires and Filipino politics are closely related. Most of the rubber in the world is produced on British and Dutch territory, but consumed in America.

If the Malay Peninsula, Java and Ceylon do not supply enough rubber, or charge too much for it, America pays the bills, or goes without the rubber.

So the scheme is to raise it in the Philippines.

But rubber, like sugar, is a large-scale, capitalized business.

And the Philippine government has passed laws limiting land holdings in the islands capable of producing rubber, for the purpose of keeping out large-scale American capitalism.

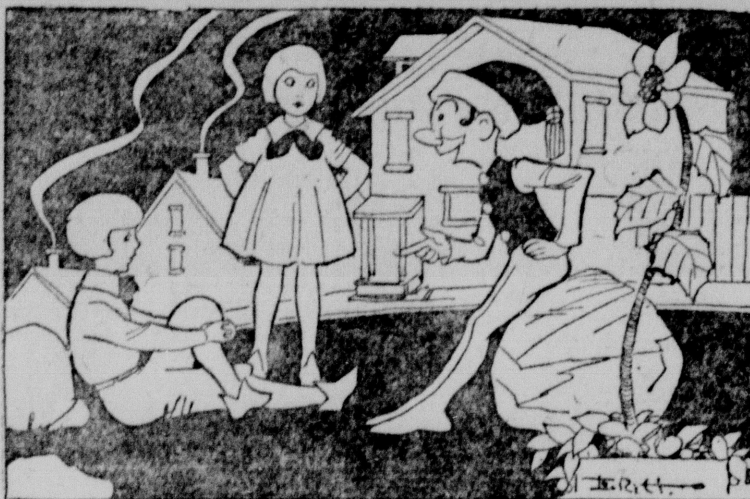

Now the Philippines have to choose between sacrificing an opportunity for an enormously profitable industry or giving up this cherished plan of keeping land holdings small and native.

NO. 21—THE LAST OF TICK TOCK

Tick Tock, the little clock fairy laughed. "I just know that was what you were thinking," he said.

"Why, did you say that old clock on the kitchen wall took a thousand men to make?" asked Nick. "I've seen men in jewelry stores fix up clocks and I think one man could make one."

"Tick Tock, the little clock fairy laughed. 'I just knew that was what you were thinking,' he said."

"Yes, after all the material was given to him, perhaps he could," said Tick Tock. "But it takes men to make material, or even to find it. The works of a clock have all sorts of minerals in them that must be mined and worked and purified before a watchmaker or a clockmaker can use them at all. Copper, steel, brass and lead all have a place in a clock. Even gold and silver in some clocks—and jewels."

"The porcelain or enamel in the dial is made of fine baked clay that takes mining and preparing and all sorts of things before it becomes a clock face. Then there is the glass, and the wood in the case, the oils to make it go, and so forth. The best clock oil is made from black fish which are very hard to find and hard to catch. More men again! Yes, it takes a thousand men to make the plainest clock, my dears. Ships, trains, mines, furnaces and a great deal of skill with it all. Clocks are wonderful things."

"We have had a fine time on our adventure," said Nancy. "and we have learned a lot. Haven't we, Nick? I'm sure we are ever and ever so much obliged."

"You're welcome," said Tick Tock heartily. "There are still more clocks in the world that you have not seen, but time was too short to show you everything. I know of one clock in a church that has such beautiful chimes, a man at the organ inside."

ers say for them—that they prefer poverty with independence. So, rubber, nationalism, and politics are all in the jumble.

The moving pictures, says a producer, are now in the control of substantial business men "who conduct their affairs with the same integrity and close attention given to any other large production of merchandise." And he didn't even know it was funny!

Perhaps it wasn't.

We are in such a business age that to speak of an art, an amusement, a public education, as "merchandise" is rather a compliment.

And certainly a lot of that which has been turned out by our factories deserves the name. It is merchandise, and we are proud of it.

The trouble is that we also send it all over the world, as the mirror of America.

And there are countries whose good opinion would be a business asset who think that factory-manufactured art and merchandise enlightenment are incongruities belonging to an undeveloped civilization.

THE TANGLE

I have never heard a woman speak so enthusiastically of another, my dear Leslie, as Paula Perrier does of you. Although she said nothing about it, I almost got the impression that you brought back her faith not only in God but in man; that you, and no one else, gave her the strength to go on and do the things which have brought her such great success and consequent happiness.

You can imagine how I felt, dear lady, when after leaving Miss Perrier I happened to seat myself beside Mrs. Atherton, a woman of entirely different temperament, although I should say a woman quite as clever in her way. She has, as you probably know, a very caustic tongue. I realized this as I heard her talking about some one else; but when your name was mentioned, her conversation was like the cooling of the dove.

She told me that she was your husband's private secretary, and I mentioned the wives seldom like their husbands' private secretaries. She answered that she had been your father's assistant, and you had recommended her for the place with your husband. She also said, without any circumlocution, that you were much too good for your husband, although she qualified the statement a little by saying that Mr. Prescott was much above the ordinary man in many ways.

I don't know, Leslie, whether she

OUR BOARDING HOUSE

BY AHRENS

was trying to make me understand something by inference, or whether it was my guilty conscience. She looked at me mightily queerly.

Both women spoke of your love for your children, and both said that they could see no difference in the way you treated and seemed to care for your adopted son and your own younger son.

I need not tell you, my dear Madonna of the Snows, that I spent my entire evening with these two women. Each was charming in her way: Miss Perrier very beautiful, Mrs. Atherton extremely distinguished. It certainly is a compliment to any one to have these two women, so diametrically opposite in taste, in lives, and in accomplishments, speak so enthusiastically of another woman as they did of you.

And now, my dear, I am going out of your life, except by way of a letter now and then. I cannot deny myself; I am not strong enough to deny myself the exquisite pleasure of sitting down and writing to you in a way that I probably would never write to any other being. Certainly I would not write to you this way if I were your husband, for it has always seemed to me that the closer I was bound to a woman, the harder it would be to be myself with her.

You see, Leslie, I don't like myself very well, and I can't understand why any woman should like me very well; yet, strange as it may seem, many women have liked me much.

There, you see, I am getting egotistical again. At least I am not asking you whether you like me or not. I am only arrogating to myself the right to love you as long as I shall live.

DAILY RECORD OF
HUNT NECESSARY
UNDER NEW LAWSHunting Season Now On;
Resume of Law is Made Public

The duck season opened September 16 and closes Dec. 31, the limit of one day's kill being 15. Nearly 50 hunters have taken out licenses from the city clerk, and although but few flocks of ducks have been seen here so far this season it is expected that the sportsmen will be able to bring down a few birds on their first trips out.

Other open season dates are as follows: Geese, Sept. 16 to Dec. 31, limit 8; coots, Sept. 16 to Dec. 31, limit 15; mourning doves, Sept. 1 to Sept. 30, limit 15; rails, Sept. 16 to Nov. 30, limit 15; plovers, Sept. 16 to Dec. 31, limit 15; snipes, Sept. 16 to Dec. 31, limit 15; bob white quail, Nov. 10 to Dec. 31, limit 12; prairie chickens, Nov. 10 to Dec. 31, limit 3; cock pheasants, Nov. 10 to Nov. 30, limit 2; squirrels, Sept. 1 to Dec. 31, limit 10; rabbits, Nov. 10 to Jan. 31, limit 15; muskrats and minks, Nov. 1 to March 1, no limit other for bearing animals, Nov. 1 to Feb. 15, no limit.

William J. Stratton, chief of the game department, emphasizes three provisions of the law for hunters to follow: Obtaining a license on club grounds and leased grounds; the keeping of an accurate record of the number and kind of birds shot each day; and the keeping of similar individual records of birds killed by individual club members, or hunters on leased grounds. No hunting is allowed on private club grounds until these provisions are observed.

There is some question in the minds of local hunters as to whether or not they are required to pay a $10 license fee in addition to paying the rent for use of leased lands from farmers or others. Game Warden Cohenour interprets the law to mean that a license must be paid whenever any person or persons pay in any way for the privilege of hunting on any particular land, regardless of its extent. If a hunter is permitted to hunt on land without paying for the privilege, he does not have to pay the $10 license required of those who secure exclusive rights over certain land by paying for the special privilege of hunting there. The law requires that every hunter shall show a record of the migratory birds killed each day, when requested to do so by any person having authority to make arrests in enforcing the game law, and possession of more than the legal limit of birds by any hunter who does not show a record of each day's kill will be taken as prima facie evidence that the birds were all killed the same day and the hunter will be liable to a fine.

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 19—(AP)—"Big Bill" Tilden and "Little Bill" Johnston, are the finalists in the annual tournament in the national tennis title. Victories in preliminary rounds in different halves of the draw enabled them to be in the title round today for the sixth time in seven years.

Football News
From Conference
Training Practice

Chicago, Sept. 19—(AP)—The tocsin "first scrimmage" sounds today on many midwest practicing gridirons as the finale of the first week of workouts.

Drilled in fundamentals, aerial formations, blocking and tackling, elevens at Northwestern, Ohio State, Indiana and Wisconsin vied up to simulate the coming season's crucial combats under the critical eyes of coaches instead of cheering stands. Elsewhere, the "real thing" is set for early next week.

Injuries in part and the continued heat are responsible for the delays. Chicago is minus a promising guard candidate in Nehf, who suffered an injury to his side that may prove to be a rib fracture. Minnesota's first casual is Van Duzee, half back, whose mishap is not so serious.

A temporary first team centering about the captain Bob Brown and Flora and Grubb, veterans of 1924, is Coach Yost's showing for a week of effort at Michigan. Some of the selections on it show promise of permanency.

Coach Ingwersen of the Hawks is postponing heavy workouts until he makes some guard selections. Keel and Rodaweg, sophomores, and Rofensberger, veteran reserve, are prominent potentials for positions alongside Captain Griffin.

The heat is compelling Coach Phen to hold twilight sessions at Purdue for rehearsal for running signals and various formations. Captain Hierneson, Gladders, Wilcox and Taube are showing well in the back field.

Summer temperatures also interfere with the practice program of the Illini which is concentrating on signal drill and a sifting of back field hopefuls. "Red" Grange, the all-American back devotes much of his time to punting and passing.

With only a week intervening until the Baylor game, Notre Dame is speeding up drill in fundamentals upon which Coach Rockne has indicated he will depend against the Texans.

White Sox

New York, Sept. 19—(AP)—Most major league clubs were closely bunched today with the Pirates and Senators continuing their triumphant march towards the bunting in the National and American circuits respectively.

Four Boston pitchers fell under a barrage of 18 hits from the Buccaneers, who registered a 9-7 victory. However, Pittsburgh's lead remained at seven games as the Giants topped the Cubs, 8-3.

The Cardinals strengthened their grip on the fourth rung by turning out a 9-5 victory over Brooklyn. Dazzy Vance, Robin's star twirler, was replaced by Brown in the eighth inning when St. Louis scored seven runs. Vance's ineffectiveness was caused by a sore finger on his pitching hand. The Cardinals are one game in front of Brooklyn.

Philadelphia trounced the Reds 5-1. Willoughby beating Donohue in a pitching duel.

The world's champions easily disposed of the White Sox, 10-5, but a double victory for the Athletics over the Tigers 4-2 and 7-3 enabled the Mickmen to gain half a game. The Senators now lead by seven games. Detroit holds fourth place against Chicago by one game.

Cleveland made sixth place more secure against the Yankees by coming out on the long end of a 6-5 score in Boston. The Indians have a two game margin on the Huguen.

Bob Meusel's 29th homer of the year and Babe Ruth's 20th four bagger, helped the New York Yanks defeat the Browns, 4-2. McManus of St. Louis broke the Yankee's pitcher's record of 42 consecutive earned runless innings by slugging his 13th circuit drive of the year in the sixth.

SYNOPSIS

A mysterious young tramp and Potts, an experienced vagabond, are at the foot of a railroad trestle in Granite Gorge, in the Rockies, where they have just been joined by "Spike" Nelson, a hardened hobo. It is night and a chill wind is falling heavily. A fragment of rock overturns the can in which they have been preparing their evening meal. Then comes a rush of boulders, and the three "knights of the road," now imperiled, scramble up the framework of the trestle to the tracks above.

CHAPTER I—Continued

Strangely enough, at just this moment the whistle of the flyer, as it sped toward Granite Gorge, sounded plaintively above the storm. The tramps stood rooted to the tracks, staring into one another's drawn faces during the brief periods of illumination provided by the lightning, which was growing more frequent.

Again—much nearer—the Limited's whistle.

"My God, we'll have to stop her, somehow," cried Bob at last. "If she hits that boulder no power on earth can save her from jumping the tracks and plunging into the rapids!"

Spike gripped Bob's arm and halted him as the young man turned to race down the tracks in the direction of the oncoming express. Lightning showed Bob that the common fright had faded from Spike's hard face, and his place there had come a bright gleam of appreciation for the opportunity at hand.

"Don't be in a hurry, boy!" Spike leered evilly. "What's de use of spoiling de rich pickins for ourselves!"

"Help, fellows!" cried Bob, desperately pushing the boulder.

Bob gasped at the cold cruelty of Spike's idea, when he understood it. But then—a surge of better indifference came over him, and he relaxed.

"Dat's de ticket, kid! You're wise, eh? De Limited's stuffed to de roof wit' registered mail, an' after she bumps off dere won't be no one left to tell us to keep our fingers outen de wreck!"

Again—the plaintive, wailing whistle above the tempest; very near, now. Already the long finger of the flyer's searchlight made, on the blackness of the storm, a faintly luminous patch against which the Old Witch's Mask was etched in misty silhouette—as the train raced toward the curve where, for twenty years, it had passed in safety, but where now a certain doom awaited it.

CHAPTER II

In those dozen mad seconds during which he stood manlessly irresolute and indifferent on the tracks and listened to the curdling crescendo of the Limited's break-neck race toward the boulder and destruction, somewhere in a far corner of Bob's mind a door seemed to slam gustily. Its echoes through the dead corridors of his soul coldly reminded him of the immediate truth—that his books and his doors were closed to society now and—for aught he cared—forever. The sharp tip of Nelson's steel hand pecked at his elbow. "Git offen de track, 'bo, or yuh'll git smeared. Let's shinny up dis ledge here, outen de way, until she—bumps off!"

Bob was dimly conscious that Potts was whimpering there beside the tracks in the darkness, and that Spike in his greedy excitement was chattering incessant curses. Bob saw them against a granite canvas by the momentary art of a stroke of lightning, in smoky halftones, as Rembrandt might have painted them in enduring art—the blowy and weak-faced Potts mewing in horrified anticipation; the rat-nosed Spike with his metal claw defensively thrown before his face as if to ward off any punishing side-sweep of the coming wreck.

With legs at once light as breath and heavy as lead in the confused drama on the rockbound stage where he had been unwittingly thrust, Bob lurched from the tracks and joined his pals in a cowardly scramble away from the prophetic rails that were already singing a litany of death to the pounding vibrations of the oncoming flyer.

As he fled Bob stumbled and fell, striking his face against the rocky slope. Thereupon a vision of disaster flared in his head and vividly revealed in an unbroken series of lightning flashes the Limited tripping and buckling over the boulder, then somersaulting from the trestle into the thrashing abyss like a string of incandescent sausages slipping by night from the bloody counter of a Hadian butcher into the maw of a meat grinder. Shrieks, a long concerted shriek—imprecations—grinding noises—men, women—babies—human flesh and blood and bones—a longer shriek—

It was the whistle of the Limited under the tissue of his dream. Bob, dully jumping up, with a stinging pain in his face from the blow that had knocked him out, quaked as he realized that the hideous climax was—not yet.

The Limited had begun its rushing sweep around the curve of the Old Witch's Mask now, and Bob, from where he balanced himself on the precarious slope above the tracks, could see the nebulae of the headlight's gestative lambency suddenly, like a cosmic miracle or phenomenon, resolve into a fast swelling of brilliant intensity. Under its searching light his soul felt bared—discovered in shame. Then the door that had closed in his mind flew open again, letting a cool draft of returning sanity blow over his fevered mind. Great God, he was not so far out upon the lonely fringes that he could be a murderer!

But precious time had been lost and it seemed too late to remedy his monstrous dilatoriness now. With a cry of sharp command to his hobo comrades already some distance above him, Bob whirled and slid down to the tracks. Spike pitched himself after Bob, cursing malevolently, determined to abort Bob's reformation; spitting and snarling like a tomcat thwarted of a salmon can. Potts tobaggoned comfortably after them on his wide and well-filled pants.

"Help, for God's sake, fellows!" cried Bob, desperately pushing the boulder in an effort to topple it off the tracks into the Gorge; while the argot and instincts of football hours not far behind disciplined his tongue and mind in this crowded moment. Spike's answer was a vicious blow of his steel hand against Bob's temple. "Come away from here, yuh crazy loon!" he yelled, tugging at Bob's coat with his one good hand, and stabbing him with the spike.

Bob kicked him off rudely, then rethrew the whole strength of his big young body against the boulder, meanwhile calling encouragement in the manner of his lineament days to Potts, who gingerly essayed to help. But Potts' efforts amounted to little more than laying his fat weight on the boulder rather than against it. Bob realized that it was useless to try to move the boulder, and that ten seconds more had sloughed off into futility with the Limited many score yards nearer to its doom.

It seemed too late to take even the one remaining chance, but take it Bob's suddenly awakened fighting brain automatically decided to do. He made a leaping start for a sprint up the tracks toward the oncoming express; but in that same instant Spike also jumped—toward Bob. "Spoil me game, eh? You—!" cursed Spike, swinging his steel arm like a clubbing rod full and viciously at Bob's head.

The luminous finger of the Limited's searchlight pointed out a strange picture of primitive action latenced by the pelting rain: Spike, believing his vengeance accomplished, dashing for the safety of the ledge; stubby Potts, panic-struck, riveted to the tracks near the boulder; Bob, dazed, on his knees from the effects of Spike's blow.

Postmaster George L. Spangler received a communication Saturday morning which was indeed a unique one in the annals of the local post office history. It was a postal money order issued to E. D. Powell of Henderson, Ky., for $5, by Postmaster H. A. Black, who at that time presided at the local office. The money order was issued in payment of an account due Mr. Henderson by the A. B. Whitney Nursery, which transacted business south of town extensively. It carried the date of Dec. 5, 1882, and the letter enclosing the order was signed by N. A. Whitney as cashier of the Whitney concern. It appears that this money order was mislaid and had never been cashed after more than forty-two years, during which time the payee had expired and the son in settling the estate of his father, found the ancient paper and presented it for payment. The government is going to pay it. Both the issuing and paying postmasters, as well as the remitter and payee, have long since expired, but the order is still of value.

MAY SEYMOUR FOOTLOOSE

by BEATRICE BURTON
SEQUEL TO "THE FLAPPER WIFE"

ONEA

THE STORY SO FAR:

MAY SEYMOUR, whose husband killed himself because of her love affair with another man, returns to her home town after a year's absence. She sells her property, and with her whole tiny fortune in cash, sets out to find and marry a man with money.

At Atlantic City she meets HERBERT WATERBURY through a divorcee, MRS. CARLOTTA FROKING. When he proposes, May accepts him, believing him a millionaire. She turns over to him all her money for investment, and he disappears with it.

Penniless, May sells her jewelry to pay her fare to California where Carlotta has a bungalow. On her way west, she stops off in her home town to visit her old friends, DICK and GLORIA GREGORY. There she meets a widower, ULYSSES FORGAN, who falls sincerely in love with her and asks her to marry him. But May refuses, explaining that she likes him too well to marry him without love, and goes on to California.

Carlotta doesn't welcome May warmly when she finds that she can't pay her board, and May leaves. She finds a position selling real estate, but gives it up when her employer makes love to her. Finding herself again without funds, May wires to Ulysses for fare home. She returns to the Gregorys, and there Ulysses comes to see her. He tells her she ought not to live with the non-too-rich Gregorys, but ought to go out into the world to make her own living. May takes his advice, gets a job, and sets herself up in housekeeping rooms. Then she loses her job, and Ulysses offers her one in his own office. But May refuses it, on the grounds that her stenography is so poor that she wouldn't earn her salary.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

MAY'S next position was in the advertising department of a large store. Her work there consisted mainly of addressing envelopes.

Sometimes she addressed as many as five hundred a day. But this was not enough. A thousand a day was the number required, and at the end of the second week May gave up her job.

She rented a typewriter, took it home, and for three days practiced on it. But neither her speed nor her accuracy increased. It was hard to believe that only ten years ago she had been a first-rate typist who could turn out a hundred letters a day!

Every night she read the "Help Wanted" ads carefully, but failed to see anything promising. She had very little money, and she lived on soda crackers and coffee for several days.

Finally she made up her mind to take anything in the way of a job. "Anything" proved to be filling and errand running in the office of a large eastern railroad.

She worked nine hours a day, and earned $14 a week. On the first Saturday

"All my life . . . I've been trying to find my way to you," she said in a whisper.

Ulysses, May tore open her envelope and looked at the money she had saved for all week long.

There had been a time when she had spent that much, and more, every week on lunches downtown and for gasoline for her car.

Now it must buy her food, pay her rent, and supply her with what clothes she needed.

So far, she had had to buy very few clothes. The dresses and shoes she had bought in Atlantic City, months ago, were still smart and fresh looking.

As a matter of fact, they were much too smart to be worn by an office girl in a railroad office.

May caught the other girls in the place looking askance at her once or twice. They seemed to be wondering why a girl who wore hand-made dresses and custom-made shoes should be working for $14 a week.

Any pair of shoes she had cost more than $14 . . . that was plain to be seen! And the other girls told each other so in the washroom where they gathered to gossip.

May knew that they gossiped about her; and so she made no effort to be friendly with them, although she needed friends.

She sat alone in the darkest corner of the room, walling off from the others by the filing cases, and worked like a machine day in and day out, for two months.

Three or four times Gloria Gregory telephoned to ask May out for Sunday night supper. But May refused.

She knew that she couldn't afford to return their hospitality, for one thing. But there was another reason for her repeated refusals. . . . The very sight of Gloria's happiness in her home had suddenly become unbearable to May. She didn't know why, either . . .

He had a way of looking at May, of standing too close to her when he talked to her, that was insulting. May felt very sorry for Mrs. Boulanger, a white-faced little woman who brought her husband to the office every morning and called for him every night—as if she didn't dare to trust him out of her sight.

"Well, if you're day-dreaming about me, I don't mind your doing it," bubbled Mr. Boulanger. "About these papers—" He pointed to the roll on May's desk with a fat forefinger.

"About these papers—you're to take them up to Mr. Forgan—" . . . Ulysses X. Forgan!

When Mr. Boulanger had gone, May sat perfectly still looking down at the roll of papers bound together by a thick elastic band. It was the most ordinary roll of paper imaginable, and yet to May that April afternoon it looked like the Magic Carpet of Baghdad.

For it was the means of taking her to the man she loved!

Outside there was sunshine and a high wind that tossed scraps of paper over the city streets like white butterflies over a meadow.

The very smell of springtime was in the air . . . as if the fragrance of all the daffodils and burgeooning buds out in the country lanes had found its way into the gray town.

And without warning something very like springtime blossomed in May's breast. It was as if all the coldness and the loneliness went out of it, as miraculously as winter leaves the earth. . . .

For the first time in months and months she was happy . . . wonderfully happy. In all her life, she could not remember such happiness as this. . . . She was going to the man she loved . . . the one man in all the world she could ever love!

THE one man in all the world sat at his desk, frowning.

He was trying to decide which would bore him least . . . to go out and play golf, or to go home and putter in the garden.

Neither prospect lured him much. When he went out to play golf, he spent most of his time comparing the women on the links with May Seymour. . . . wondering how she would look in a scarlet golf sweater and leather skirt.

And if he went home to dig in the garden, he would picture her there standing on the gravelled path between the rows of budding plants, with the sun in her eyes. . . .

He got up suddenly and put on his hat. . . . He'd get out and walk off his mood. No use to stay here and brood about a woman who didn't care the snap of her white finger for him.

At that instant the door opened and the woman, herself, walked into his office.

"A package for you from Mr. Boulanger," she said, demurely, and laid a large, rubber-stamped bundle on his desk.

Ulysses stared and stammered. "You working for him?" he asked.

"Yes," May answered. She threw back her head with a defiant movement.

"I'm his office girl," she said. Then she turned to go.

She had reached the door, and her hand was on the knob when he stopped her. "Wait!" he said, and she turned and faced him quietly.

The length of the office was between them.

May measured it with her eye. She had once thought she would like to be footloose . . . to travel all the high-roads of the world . . . but now she knew that the only road for her was the few feet of space between her and Ulysses Forgan.

She never knew whether or not he called her to come to him. She never knew how she crossed the floor of that office of his. All she knew . . . all she wanted to know . . . was that she was in his arms, close held against his breast.

"All my life . . . it seems to me . . . I've been trying to find my way here . . . to you," she said in a whisper so low that Ulysses could hardly hear what she said. But he did hear, and he held her even more closely . . . held her as if he would never let her go.

And as May looked up at him, she knew beyond all doubt that life held no better thing for her . . . or for any other woman . . . than this: to be in the arms of the man she loved.

AERIAL CIRCUS AT AMBOY SUNDAY FOR AMERICAN LEGION

Snyder's Flying Circus to Appear for Benefit of Veterans

Amboy—The Amboy Fair grounds will be the scene of much activity Sunday afternoon when Snyder's flying circus will appear and perform all sorts of stunts for the spectators. Auto polo games and motorcycle races will be served up to those desiring thrills by the company, which is being brought here by the local American Legion organization.

Three large planes will take part in this aerial circus according to the advance man and each one is to be piloted by a capable man. These men all have had a number of years of experience in flying and guarantee to give the onlookers plenty of thrills when they have climbed several hundred feet in the air.

Walter Hallgren, the ace of the company, will put on a program of stunts that will satisfy the craving of all who have appetites for thrills. During the world war this pilot served in the air service and when peace was finally declared he had several German planes to his credit. He is a man who knows no fear and has plenty of nerve is the statement that is made by those who have watched him go through his repertoire of aerial stunts.

Two other planes will assist Mr. Hallgren in trick flights, battle formations and many fancy maneuvers. George Babcock, said to be the world's most daring aerial acrobat, will hang from a plane by his teeth, stand on his head and stand upright as the plane loops the loop. He concludes his part of the program with a parachute drop from an altitude of 1000 feet. It is said that he is so expert in his manipulation of the parachute that he can make his landing under favorable conditions, in front of the grandstand.

Following the aerial program, a number of motorcycle riders will take their mounts onto the track in a racing contest. Some of the drivers who will appear are Arthur Peterson, Rueben Held, Charles McKee, Clyde Rose and Derby Jones. It is also expected that several drivers from Dixon will participate in the contest.

Auto polo, one of the most exciting games that is being played lately, will be seen by the people on the grounds. The game will be played

AMUSEMENTS

WOODS THEATER, CHICAGO
PRESENTS ROSE MARIE ONLY
TWO WEEKS MORE. MATINEE $1.00, $1.50, $2.00.

Maria Shanson, the golden voiced prima donna in "Rose-Marie," now in its 30th week at the Woods, says that there are many reasons why the role of "Rose-Marie" appeals to her so strongly.

"Everybody loves a red-blooded man's play, with strong, healthy appeal to the audience as well as to the characters; they have a personal appeal. There is nothing sadder and there are no dull moments in Mr. Hammerstein's musical play. There is a thrilling vigor and vitality to "Rose-Marie" that seldom is found in this kind of entertainment.

There is an inspiring beauty to the score that makes you sing; rather, it is the romance and hardness of the whole thing, or rather it is the spectacular costumes, or the fact that the early scenes of the play are laid in the grandeur of the Canadian Rockies? The whole play seems to warm your blood with enthusiasm and you forget the theater and live and sing the story because there is a realism that you can not get away from. There is silent majesty to Kootenay Pass that always sets my blood to tingling, and when the orchestra strikes the first note of the "Indian Love Call," I forget that I am in the mimic world of the stage and seem to live in the reality of nature.

"The stage work of the actress can be best compared to people in the other marts of trade: if you like your work, you will give your best efforts; enthusiasm for what you are doing; then there can be no real success. Few musical plays have a story. If it is distasteful and you have no story that runs through the whole play; it is generally lost somewhere in the middle of the first act, which is the reason that musical comedy never appealed to me, but "Rose Marie" is more like grand opera; the story is almost as important as the music and as I was educated in grand opera I suppose that is why the character of "Rose-Marie," which is unusual in the types of people, its atmosphere and dramatic poetry, is more like the delectable cocktail than it is real work.

"MERCENARY MARY" IS MAKING BIG HIT AT GARRICK THEATER, CHICAGO

"Mercenary Mary," a musical comedy in two acts by Wm. B. Friedlander, with the lyrics by Mr. Friedlander and Con Conrad, is now at the Garrick Theater, under the management of L. Lawrence Weber of New York.

Pronounced by several Dixon people who have seen it as the best attraction in Chicago.

In the chorus of "Mercenary Mary" this new musical comedy, will in all likelihood, take Chicago by storm. Such furious dancing as staged by a couple of dozen girls has, it is almost safe to say, never been seen in recent seasons on a local stage. In the first appearance of the girls in a number called "Charleston Mad," they fairly shock and audience unprepared for such a performance, generally stop the show when they come on and arouse gales of applause. It seems almost beyond human endurance to dance nine times a week as this chorus really does, but they get away with it, for rightly it is no chorus as musical shows go, but a group of specialty dancers, who at times show their talents in solo work and then band together and fairly charge the audience with stunning effect.

Allen Kearns, who will be remembered as one of the "Little Jessie James" company playing here not so many months ago, is the youthful hero in this new show. Marion Fairbanks, of the Twins of that name, makes a charming and comely heroine and it is in reality a polished dancer. Louis Simon, the rising comedian, whose most recent engagement here was in the musical comedy, "Moonlight," and Sam Hearn, veteran funster, will rock laughter out of listeners by their antics. There, too, are Nellie Breen, a nimble stepper, John Boles, Frank Kingdom, who was with "Sailor" for a long run, our Chicago favorite Juliette Day, and many other notables.

"TELL ME MORE" SELWYN THEATER, CHICAGO

The Selwyn Theater, Chicago, seems to have been particularly fortunate in the selection of musical attractions presented there. The latest offering that comes out of New York, and to be headlined at the Selwyn, is "Tell Me More," a musical comedy that was presented last season at the Gaiety Theater and proved one of the snappiest, funniest and brightest, musically, of the season's offerings. The book of "Tell Me More" is by William K. Wells and Fred Thompson the lyrics by B. G. DeSylva and Ira Gershwin, and the music by the wonderfully popular George Gershwin whose tinkling melodies in "Lady Be Good," as well as in "Tell Me More," have earned for him a tremendous reputation in the light opera field.

"Tell Me More" is a big show in every particular. Syncopated features of the score are taken care of by Kosarin's world-famous orchestra, and the chief comedy role has been allotted to the inimitable Lou Holtz, favorably recalled from numerous vaudeville appearances and also from three years with George White's Scandals. Holtz is a funny man and it is said he has never been more mirth-provoking than in "Tell Me More," which by the way is being sponsored by Edward D. Smith, the Pacific Coast manager who numbers among his successes the western companies presenting "Lady Be Good" and "No, No, Nanette." Also in the cast is the lithesome Emma Haag, formerly with Ziegfeld's Follies, and later premiere danseuse with "The Music Box Revue." Mabel Withee, who will be favorably remembered most recently as a featured player in "Artists and Models," also washes in out of the plot. There is a large chorus of dancers, the production is beautifully mounted, the melodies are of the swaying, lilting type; the comedy is gloriously infectious, so that altogether "Tell Me More" is one of the real early-season successes in Chicago.

Did You Ever Stop to Think—

BY
E. R. Waite, Secretary,
Shawnee, Okla. Board of Commerce

Hale Holden, President of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, says:

"That the only reason western railroads are asking for higher freight rates is that since 1916 their total earnings have increased only 54 per cent, while their operating expenses and taxes have increased 87 per cent, and in consequence they need more money to pay the costs of and provide additional facilities for performing their service to western people."

"That the railroads have been very reluctant to apply for an increase of rates because people are already bearing a burden of generally high prices, and that the western railroads finally asked for an advance in rates only after having failed regularly for five years to earn anywhere near the 5% per cent return on their valuation which the Interstate Commerce Commission has held they are entitled."

That the costs of service include wages, prices and taxes now 50 to 200 per cent higher than the railroads had to pay before the war.

That despite constant efforts of the railroads to spread information, the facts behind their application for increased rates are still unknown to, or misunderstood by a large section of the people.

That commodity prices in general now average 57 per cent over the 1913 level while the average freight rate per ton per mile on western railways is only 37 per cent over 1913.

That if general comparisons hold good in the western district as they must approximately, western freight rates would have to be increased an average of 14 per cent in order to equalize them with the general level of commodity prices, or 11 per cent to enable the western carriers to earn the return permitted under the law.

That the western lines, however, in order to show their continued spirit of cooperation with their patrons, do not now propose to ask the full measure of their rights under the law and will only ask a moderate increase, substantially less than they might legally seek, and one that will not be a

When this Happens, we cannot help you!

Every home contains valuable papers and other things which deserve more protection than a tin box and a front door lock . . . things no amount of fire or burglar insurance can replace. Keep them at home and when thieves or flames remove them, we are unable to do anything but express sympathy.

Our safety deposit boxes in this bank are low in price, but mighty in safeguarding the things you wish to keep. Handy, too!
